Here's a summary: Darth Vader? In October, I interviewed Dutch filmmaker Paul Verhoeven for my book, "Ugh, It's a Schlockfest!: The 80s Cameo Cinema." I was fascinated by Verhoeven's 1983 film "Basic Instinct" and by his "Robocop" trilogy, as well as his Oscar-nominated "The Fourth Man." Verhoeven was interested in doing a cameo in my book. He wanted to play a homosexual fascist. At the time, I jokingly told him, "You must be Darth Vader. You should think about that." He didn't take it as a joke. He told me that "Darth Vader" was a role he had played, and that he had written a memo to his agent suggesting the part of the Dark Lord of the Sith for me. I showed him the movie "Gremlins 2," and told him it was a really great movie. A few months later, I was in an elevator with Verhoeven, and he mentioned "Darth Vader." He had just seen it, he said. I was incredulous. This was the man who had insisted on Darth Vader as the hero of his film "Basic Instinct"? Verhoeven has now issued a formal retraction, having reviewed "Gremlins 2" on DVD and found that Darth Vader's closeted evil is really not a character flaw, but an instrument of his own dastardly machinations. "The role is much more interesting if Darth Vader is a villain," he said. "They made an error of judgement. I've talked to my agent about that. It's a pity. But as an actor I can't let that happen." Of course he can. If you could play Darth Vader, you'd play Darth Vader. Verhoeven has promised to play a major role in my next film, "Starship Mutiny: The Hard Way."
