An e-Adventure is a game or an online simulation in which the user is placed in a virtual environment where he/she can interact with the real world in a virtual environment, interact with the other virtual players (friends), and possibly learn something. Example: Star Wars Galaxies was developed by Turbine Software Corporation, and was released as an online 3D MMORPG in North America in January 2003. Players could customize and decorate their own ship, upgrade their ship and their character, then compete in an open PvP (Player vs. Player) arena. Goal: The user in the e-Adventure is supposed to achieve a goal, the best method of achieving this goal is to use the real world as a learning tool. In this way, the e-Adventure allows the user to transfer the real world into the virtual world. Potential use: A 3D game would be useful for the introduction of a topic to the user, a lesson that needs to be conveyed, or a method of teaching students how to interact with the topic. An MMO game would be useful for the development of positive social interactions among users, students, or groups of users. Requirements: An e-Adventure should have the following requirements. Scalable Seamless integration of real world, virtual world, and online social networking Versatility of learning strategies and educational goals Ease of use Sufficient interactive experiences to gain interest and maintain interest of the user Readability Fair play – not designed to engage in unethical actions Collaboration High quality production See also eLearning Virtual learning environment E-learning Category: Educational technology Category: Virtual learning environments An angry mob of self-described "anarchists" who gathered outside the Confederate statue in Charlottesville, Virginia, on August 12 made an armed rush on police officers and Virginia's governor. ADVERTISEMENT President Trump has continued to call out the white supremacists who took part in the violence. He said that he told the media that “many sides” were responsible for the violence but did not call out the white nationalists by name, although the Washington Post noted that he drew a direct comparison to the KKK. Trump administration officials said Tuesday that the Justice Department had sent a letter to Charlottesville city officials seeking answers about the violence. "If any municipality or State or local government fails to comply with the provisions of this section and such failure is not cured within 30 days of the date of the letter, the Attorney General may request the Attorney General of the District of Columbia to initiate a civil action in
